† ASK A PASTOR

REV. DR. ANDREW TAYLOR-TROUTMAN

QUESTION

*How do you explain
evil in the world?
Where does it come from?*

Dear Pastor,

How do you explain evil in the world? Where does it come from?

Your questions have been on the minds and hearts of religious people since the beginning.

The most straightforward religious answer is that there are gods of good and evil. It is believed that these deities are battling, and sometimes the bad guys (they are usually male) win, at least temporarily. That is one way to explain evil.

This dualism, however, was never an option for Judaism, which held that there was only one God, the maker of heaven and earth. Evil was not part of the Creator's good intention (see Genesis 1), yet it resulted from the sin of humans (see Genesis 2 and 3).

But laying full blame on humankind has never been very satisfactory either; read the books of Ecclesiastes and Job. It is evident that dreadful events transpire and individuals endure suffering without any fault of their own.

Honestly, I mistrust any “answers” that claim to explain the existence of evil. I don’t think the writers of scripture tried to answer that question, for it’s really a modern question. Unlike our ancestors, we think that we can know everything and bring all things under our control.

The ancients were more comfortable with mystery. God speaks to Job from the whirlwind, signifying the uncontrollable and unknowable nature of the divine. And Job admits there are things he cannot understand (see Job 42:1–6).

In the Old Testament, I do find a definition of the opposite of evil: “God has shown you, mortal, what is good ... do justice, love kindness, and walk humbly with your God” (Micah 6:8). For Christians, such goodness is embodied in Jesus Christ and what he did and taught. While I can’t explain evil, I do recognize such goodness when I experience it.

In hope,
Andrew
